

Natalie Amiri

Natalie Amiri – What do you do when you can't fill up your tank on a research trip in the Iranian mountains because gasoline is scarce due to Western sanctions? What happens when you wear pants that are supposedly too short and thus accept having to climb into a barrel of black paint as punishment? And why did people keep traveling to Iran despite insistent warnings? Natalie Amiri grew up in Munich in a German-Iranian family and lived and worked for over six years in the 11-million city of Tehran, the capital of the Islamic Republic of Iran. She is...

Topics

Diversity & Inclusion, Globalization, Politics, Policies & Economy, Society

Languages

Arabic, English, German

